

Light From The Deep Traveler Personality Descriptions

A – THE TRAILBLAZER

Trailblazers are innovative, strategic, knowledge seeking travelers. They're also intellectual, theoretical and conceptual thinkers.

When charting their course, Trailblazers place less regard on the route they're taking and more on where they're headed and are highly motivated by the discoveries they might make along the way. They also tend to focus more on the journey's objective than on the people with whom they are traveling.

When preparing for the journey, since Trailblazers find rules restricting and restraining, they tend to ignore the dress code and pack only what they feel like wearing.

Trailblazers are willing and eager to veer off the beaten path in search of adventure and become impatient and agitated when the scenery becomes too repetitive or monotonous. Because they are so focused on reaching their destination, Trailblazers have a tendency to overlook the needs of their fellow travelers.

B – THE CARAVANER

Caravaners are idealistic, cooperative, identity seeking travelers. They're encouraging, inspiring, and passionate for the causes they support.

When charting their course, Caravaners care more about where they're headed than with the route they'll take to get there. They are most concerned about seeking harmony with those they encounter along the way. The people with whom they travel are a major motivating factor for them.

When preparing for the journey, Caravaners are most concerned with packing items they think others would approve of.

Caravaners are adaptable and willing to alter their course if they feel it's the right thing to do and others are on board with the change in plans. They enjoy drawing out the best in those with whom they're traveling and are more interested in the possibilities to come than they are with the details of the scenery in the here and now.

C – THE NAVIGATOR

Navigators are diligent, steadfast, security seeking travelers. Other words to describe this Traveler Personality include reliable, responsible and dedicated.

When charting their course, Navigators are planners who map out their route ahead of time and plan for any and all contingencies. They are also traditionalists who favor return trips to the same places because "that's the way we've always done it."

When preparing for the journey, Navigators carefully consider the climate and attire expectations before packing accordingly.

Navigators like to stick to familiar routes because they are, well, familiar. They adhere to the map and aren't comfortable switching routes unless there is a logical and well thought out reason to do so. Navigators can become so focused on the details of the route that they lose sight of their overall surroundings.

D – THE WAYFARER

Wayfarers are practical, easy going sensory seeking travelers. They are also spontaneous, thoughtful and creative individuals.

When charting their course, Wayfarers don't plan too far ahead as they like to keep their options open. They tend to prefer traveling the established route, not because it is familiar, but because they fear the unknown path may be more unpleasant.

When preparing for the journey, Wayfarers tend to over pack since they can't decide what to leave at home.

Wayfarers take their time getting where they want to go because they want to take it all in. They are open to altering their route for a change of scenery, as long as it doesn't take them too far off course and doesn't happen too often. Wayfarers have a tendency to get so caught up in all there is to see and do where they are that they often lose site of the possibilities to come.
